

This week's lesson will focus on a recent event that shook the hearts of all Canadians and has made world headlines. Hearts are indeed heavy with the news of the 215 innocent children who were found buried in a mass grave in Kamloops. What happened to these little children is a hard conversation to have but nonetheless a conversation that needs to happen. It needs to happen so we can cultivate hearts that will never move into committing such darkness and having history repeat itself. Our children need to know so that they can understand the hurt carried by Indigenous persons in Canada.

This Sunday you are invited to take time to honor the little children whose lives were ended at the hands of residential schools. Maybe you will say a prayer for the children, draw a picture, plant a flower or a tree or light a candle. Find your way as a family to honor these children.
